Mr. Crouch concentrates his practice in construction and complex commercial litigation. Throughout his career, construction law has formed the largest portion of his practice.

Mr. Crouch has represented essentially every participant in a typical construction project including public and private owners, design professionals, construction managers, contractors and specialty subcontractors, suppliers, lenders, joint venture participants and sureties. Similarly, he has considerable breadth in construction projects, including public (highways, bridges, sewer and water, airports, jails, railroads and subways, dams, schools, athletic complexes) and private (industrial, commercial high-rises, mid-rises, and low rises, office parks, movie theatres, shopping malls and strip malls, banks, private education, hotels, warehousing and residential). Industrial projects have included power plants, steel mills, glass and plastics factories, mining facilities, turnkey operations, design-build, phased construction, environmental remediation, rehabilitation and expansions. Certain of these projects have also included proprietary processes and intellectual property issues.

Mr. Crouch is also experienced in a variety of dispute resolution mechanisms, including binding and non-binding arbitration, mediation, and mock trials. He has served as both a neutral arbitrator and party arbitrator.

Mr. Crouch has drafted and negotiated numerous contracts with a similar breadth of experience as that outlined above.

Mr. Crouch is the past chair of the Allegheny County Construction Section. For several years, he served as editor of the Construction Section's newsletter and authored the newsletter's case note section. Mr. Crouch has been a speaker at various construction-related seminars and conferences.
